The kitchen cooked up BBQ ribs and chicken, hotdogs and hamburgers, corn on the cob & coleslaw. Yum! Juicy watermelon was served to make the day perfect!

Largo Public Library!

A bit of History about Largo Library

Throughout the nineteenth century, settlers migrated into the area known today as Pinellas County. At the center of the area was a large lake, rich farmland, and, by 1880, numerous residents living in loosely connected, informal communities. The arrival of the Orange Belt Railroad in 1886 (and the railroad's requirement that all station stops have names) encouraged the residents to select the name Largo, after the area's large lake, as the name for the community. Largo's location, rich farmland, and access to transportation quickly lead it to become the center of the area's citrus industry, and in 1905 the town was officially incorporated.

Nine years later, in 1914, the Ladies' Improvement Society re-organized into the Largo Woman's Club, who decided that the fledgling community of Largo, Florida, needed a library. This original Library Committee consisted of Mrs. D.F. Judkins, Mrs. W.F. Belcher, Mrs. J.T. Jackson, Mrs. W.M. Ulmer, and Mrs. Ann McMullen. To encourage support for the new library, a large camphor tree located in the heart of downtown Largo became a "Christmas Giving Tree." Underneath the tree, enthusiastic residents left books, magazines, and even wood for bookshelves and furnishings.
